

First Line Performance Athlete Film Breakdown Framework

1. Introduction (30–60 seconds)

“Hi! My name is _____, and I’m a (position) at the _____.

First, I just want to thank you for choosing First Line Performance and trusting me to review your game. I know how much work goes into becoming a better hockey player, and I’m excited to go through your film with you.

Right off the bat, I noticed a few things I really liked about your game, and then we’ll go through some areas that I think will help you continue developing.”

2. Three Strengths (2–3 minutes)

Start with positives. Explain why each strength is valuable.

Examples:

- Great skating and mobility.
- Strong awareness without the puck.
- Good positioning/ stick positioning.
- Good communication.
- Hustles on the backcheck.
- Confident puck movement.
- Good hockey IQ.

3. Three Areas to Improve (3–4 minutes)

Choose only the highest-impact areas. Explain what happened, why it matters and how to improve.

Examples:

- Gap control
- Defensive positioning
- Shoulder checks
- Scanning before receiving the puck
- Stick/ body positioning
- Transition skating
- Decision making under pressure
- Offensive blue-line decisions

4. Hockey IQ Tips (2–3 minutes)

Share lessons you've learned at your level.

Examples:

"What separates players at the next level isn't always skating—it's making the right decision a half second sooner."

"When you don't have the puck, try to constantly scan the ice so you're already thinking one play ahead."

"When defending, your stick is often your best defensive tool."

Include practical advice the player can use immediately.

5. Practice Focus (1–2 minutes)

Leave the player with 2–3 simple and actionable things to work on over the next month.

Examples:

This week I'd focus on:

1. Scanning before every puck touch.
2. Maintaining tighter gap control.
3. Moving your feet through every puck battle.

6. Encouragement & Closing (30–60 seconds)

Make it your own- here is a template:

"I really enjoyed watching your game.

You have a lot of good habits already, and if you continue working on these few areas, I think you'll continue making great progress.

Remember, every player is constantly working to improve.

Thank you again for choosing First Line Performance. Keep working hard, enjoy the process, and I'll be cheering for you. Good luck this season!"

FLP Standards

Be encouraging.

Be honest.

Don't criticize.

Give specific examples with an explanation.

Leave the athlete motivated.

Every breakdown should leave the player feeling confident in their strengths, motivated by their opportunities for growth, and equipped with a clear plan to elevate their game.
